Introduction

We would like to inform you of an exciting sponsorship opportunity your organization may find of interest. How would you like to extend your brand's reach into the African American Community while simultaneously supporting the distribution of valuable mental health information and resources to the community?

About Us

Ine't Entertainment is a non-profit organization that offers performing arts education to empower and uplift inner-city and at-risk youth. In September of 1993, Ine't Entertainment began its programming and provided free voice, acting, dance, and instrument lessons for children and youth of color. Ine't Entertainment has worked with young people ages 2 to 24 years old throughout eastern Massachusetts, with a focus on Boston's inner-city neighborhoods. With 95% of the children and families identifying as African American, we are proud to reflect the beautiful diaspora of culturally and racially diverse backgrounds. More specifically the children are Afro-Caribbean, Latin American, Indigenous American, and Asian American. With that knowledge, our organization designs an arts curriculum that addresses the multicultural needs of each child while making all aspects of the program accessible for low-income families. Most of the families are residents of Dorchester, Roxbury, Mattapan, and Jamaica Plain.

Our History

Our team is led by President and Berklee College of Music Alum Monet Ledbetter. With a background in performance and decades of experience in the performing arts industry as a producer, pianist, vocalist, playwright, and music educator. Monet designs an art curriculum that is inclusive of music and art from the African diaspora. As a black woman born and raised in Boston, Monet decided to pair her skills in music with her goal of creating culturally diverse programs for children in her community, countering the lack of arts activities and childcare for black and brown inner-city children.

Through free music, voice, and performance lessons, Ine't Entertainment uses musical theater and storytelling to raise the awareness of self-esteem in youth. Despite the negative impacts of housing insecurity, gentrification, drugs, and the erasure of arts programming in predominantly black and low-income neighborhoods, Ine't Entertainment has made it their mission to combat these issues by instilling self-confidence, ethics, and civic responsibility.

As a way to celebrate the success of the children and showcase what they have learned throughout the year we present musicals and recitals to the larger Boston community. One of the most successful shows was an original musical written and directed by Monet Ledbetter titled “Jack’s World”. “Jack’s World” highlighted an elementary school student who runs away from home escaping the tensions of family and a lack of support from peers. The play uses hip-hop, reggae, R&B, and gospel music to build self-esteem and highlights the importance of uplifting children who are overlooked by society. The entire cast of the musical features children from Ine't Entertainment programs and has had several iterations working with more than 300 children from Boston.

Our most recent endeavor has been hosting the House of Inspiration (H.O.I.) Family Music & Arts Festival. Additionally, we offer free professional development workshops. Both initiatives aim to enrich and support our community.
